

GENEALOGY QUESTIONNAIRE: (please complete front & back of form)

To begin a search for the person you want to learn more about, some identifying detail is needed. Multiple web sites are searched and cross checked against each other. Each site generally requires certain fill-in-the-blank detail (name \ date of birth, etc.). The more detail you provide HERE, the greater the likelihood of finding meaningful information on the person of interest from one\more of these sites:

Ancestry.com - U.S. & international records, photos & family trees.

Family Search.com - Mormon Church of Latter Day Saints website.

Fold3.com - Military records - (complimenting NARA noted below).

Genealogy.com - searchable Family trees and related family linkages.

Google.com - endless possibilities from search terms in combination.

Find A Grave.com - pictures \ family data based on grave marker detail.

N.A.R.A. - National Archives & Records Administration - Washington, DC.

Newspapers.com - personal day to day news \ death notices \ obituary and related family detail sometimes found in old newspaper articles.

Newspaper Archives.com - additional historic newspaper articles.

Wiki Tree.com - searchable Family Trees

Names of one or more children of the person you are searching for:

(NOTE: Sometimes, as individuals age, they move in with their children - or one of their children may move in with them). The person you are searching for may appear in Census or City Directory records - residing in the same household with other family. Thus, having both parent and child names is a way to verify that search results are looking at the correct multi-generational household. (This is a scenario that may \ may not apply to the current person you are researching). Also important, daughters who marry almost always incur a name change. Should you list a daughter above (of the person being you are researching), it would be most helpful to know that daughter's married name.
